CONFERENCE REALIGNMENT UPDATE

On Monday October 10th, current Mountain West Conference member, TCU changed their intentions about moving from the MWC to the Big East Conference and have, instead, accepted an invitation to join the Big 12 Conference. In the Big 12, they will be able to revive some of the rivalries with some old SWC schools.

On Friday October 14th, the Mountain West Conference and Conference USA announced a football only alliance. At this point there could be as many as 22 schools in the merger and they would conduct a championship game between the two 11 team divisions to decide a champion, but with the Big East announcing that they are actively pursuing expansion, it's possible that once the dust settles a few C-USA and/or MWC schools could end up in the Big East and that merger number could drop to fewer than 22 schools.

The 4 conferences that will ultimately dictate the future of conference shuffling are the Big Ten, SEC, ACC and Pac-12. There is still talk that the Big 12 could add a few schools in the future but for now they are staying with 10 schools through 2012.

We decided to update the list we published just two weeks ago to reflect the correct conference expansion intentions. Obviously with more moves close to being finalized in the near future, we will publish those as they become official.

Below we list the schools that have officially announced plans to move from one conference to another in the next few seasons. We did not include schools involved in the alliance between the Mountain West Conference and Conference USA until we see the finalized plan. First we list the school, the move and finally, the year that the move will take place.
